6	Course Description
	The course, originally set up with support from the Voice Department of the Royal Shakespeare Company, aims to provide an intensive grounding in the key areas, practical and theoretical, of voice practice in order to enable its graduates to pursue their professional and research interests. The foundation of the course is rooted in the principles of healthy vocal use. We advocate a physiological and imaginative approach to voice work that develops the “practical, physical and emotional skills of students in an atmosphere that is enabling, supportive and empowering.” (Federation of Drama Schools Core Principles.) Based on clarity about how the voice works, imaginative intention fuels the development of personal artistry. The starting point is work on yourself: your voice and its source in your body and breath. It is the experiential understanding of this process in yourself, and listening to your colleagues on the course, that informs your own pedagogy. Through reading, discussion, reflective writing and practising as a coach or a teacher, you will relate theory and practice and learn the ways of thinking and working of a professional voice practitioner. Through full engagement with the opportunities the course provides, you will be prepared for work as a voice practitioner in private practice, in Further or Higher Education, in business, in theatre, film or television or the field of performing arts. This course also offers opportunities to work with the singing voice. This area of work enables students to explore the relationship between the disciplines of singing and speaking as an ability to work with both sung and spoken texts is becoming an increasingly important area for the voice professional. MA and MFA students work together during the first year of the MFA. The second year of study for MFA students is designed to provide greater opportunities for critical evaluation, self-reflection and development, deeper pedagogical understanding and practice, and further opportunities to deepen the acquisition of practical skills in Voice, Voice and Text or Singing. In entering the second year of the course, MFA students elect to specialise in Singing or Voice and Text.

	Students are supported through this highly intensive course by a robust pastoral system led by personal tutors who will support students throughout the course. Students can seek tutorials with specific tutors or their course director at any time. Students are also given more formal opportunities to feedback on their course through the formal BCU structures. In addition to these, the Course Director holds a termly meeting in which the cohort can express any areas of concern they may have about the course and its delivery.
