6	Course Description
	Our MSc Policing and Intelligence is designed to provide a detailed platform for critical analysis and evaluation of strategic level policing and the use of intelligence within investigations. The course will be delivered by subject matter experts and experienced practitioners (including retired police officers) with a wealth of subject expertise, to build upon existing skills and develop new ones. This course has been developed through consultation with a range of police force areas and the College of Policing, to give you the opportunity to examine strategic and operational policing, whilst also ensuring opportunities for enhancing reflective practice in order to better examine current work procedures amongst our student cohort. What's covered in the course? The course will help to develop your critical thinking about policing, policy and practice through complementary modules encompassing the theory and principles of operational policing, intelligence gathering, use of data, Inclusions and equality issues and much more. To develop these skills, you will be involved in practical activities, events and will be exposed to a range of opportunities to reflect on your current working practices. Wider discussions will also be had on the changing nature of policing, criminal justice and public sector agencies as well as current risks, threats and harm, which are impacting on communities at the operational level. Optional modules for the course will include focus on Critical Incident Command or Advanced Safeguarding and Public Protection, allowing students to examine key contemporary issues within policing. Choice and flexibility with optional modules will ensure that learners will be able to pick those subject areas which best suit their career aspirations. The course will utilise a range of exciting and innovative forms of assessment, which match the working practices within policing. You will also be supported in understanding effective strategic leadership and management within organisations, examining what works and the use of evidenced based best practice so as to utilise resources effectively. The course has been designed to work around current officers and police staff, as well as criminal justice practitioners. Students will be taught through block learning and will be asked to attend three, four hour workshops per module, per semester. The remaining the content will be available via our virtual learning environment. This flexibility will ensure that students can use the MSc to support career and educational progression within policing. The course will provide support and guidance on recognising talent within organisations and how to support and develop staff to achieve their full potential within their chosen workplace.

	The course prides itself on help educate and guide its students so they feel capable and equipped to face a variety of incidents and issues. Students will take part in three, four hour workshops in each semester for each module on the Birmingham City University campus. This will allow for students to receive direct teaching on subject material relating to a particular module. The workshops will take place on a Thursday and Friday and will be divided into one day of 8 hours teaching on a Thursday and 4 hours teaching on a Friday morning. Once the campus workshop is completed, students will carry out online studying known as ELearning. Within this, you will be required to complete tasks and activities through the BCU VLE systems. Students will be provided with considerable support for assignments and tasks throughout the 12 weeks of study. All online tasks would not require students to come onto campus and can be accessed remotely. Some modules may require the commitment of an additional day for assessments in the form of group or individual presentations on the BCU campus. This course will give you the opportunity to complete a police action project around a chosen contemporary policing issue. This will provide you with the tools to enhance existing critical thinking skills, identifying appropriate methodologies to ensure maximum impact and evaluating outcomes. Modules will examine the moral, legal and ethical arguments within policing, evaluating legacy and its role in shaping community views on law enforcement. With a wide range of diverse communities, the course will help students understand the changing nature of community dynamics and its importance in shaping policing practice, policy and procedure. The course will also discuss the international dimension to law enforcement and how criminal activities are not just domestic in their construction. Module content will explore this in greater detail and through the use of guest lecturers from around the world, the professional relationships and shared intelligence between various policing agencies will be discussed. We will explore what is to be a professional and encourage career development, ensuring that when students graduate, they are equipped to make an impact in law enforcement. Our course teaching team will also provide additional guidance sessions, online webinars and conference calls to support students at every stage of their academic learning journey so as to ensure students achieve their best.

13	Overall Student Workload and Balance of Assessment

Overall student workload consists of class contact hours, independent learning and assessment activity, with each credit taken equating to a total study time of around 10 hours. While actual contact hours may depend on the optional modules selected, the following information gives an indication of how much time students will need to allocate to different activities at each level of the course.

- Scheduled Learning includes lectures, practical classes and workshops, contact time specified in timetable
- Directed Learning includes placements, work-based learning, external visits, on-line activity, Graduate+, peer learning
- Private Study includes preparation for exams

The balance of assessment by mode of assessment (e.g. coursework, exam and in-person) depends to some extent on the optional modules chosen by students. The approximate percentage of the course assessed by coursework, exam and in-person is shown below.
